Scripture, is exanastasis. This word is made up of three parts (ex-ana-stasis). The latter two parts of the word (ana-stasis), as has been shown, mean "to rise up," or "to stand up." But the preposition ex(from ek) prefixed to anastasisadds a new dimension. The first part, ex(the form that "ek"

The Out-Resurrection
The phrase implies a certain leaving behind of "the dead"; and this is further emphasized in the Greek, where the noun rendered "resurrection" is the rare word exanastasis, i.e. the common word (anastasis) for resurrection, strengthened by the preposition meaning "from." This must not, however, be pressed far; later Greek has a ...

verse 12 uses the Greek word "exanastasis." Paul seems to have made up this word. This is the only use of it in the New Testament. We will shortly see why he felt the need to invent a special term. Paul wanted to differentiate the process of the "first resurrection" from the actual attainment of the completed process.

The word used in v 11 is exanastasis. A very literal translation, suggested by a number of commentators, is "the out-resurrection." It is evident from vv 10, 12, 13, and 14 that the out-resurrection is only obtained by persistence in good works. A person must "press on" to obtain it. It is not a free gift and it is not secure until one dies.
