Kernberg, on the other hand, regards idealization and grandiosity as serving defensive purposes, primarily to ward off the experience of envy. Kohut thus stresses the positive, transformative potential in narcissistic character disorders, while Kernberg stresses their negative, destructive and controlling nature.

narcissistic character disorder per se is a paradigm of a general
structuring of psyche,
and studying it is of
value not only in dealing with
personalities
dominated by this condition, but also for understanding its manifestation in various psychological
conditions.
